HEAT PART II

It was hot in the broomcorn fields in the morning, but it was hotter in the afternoon. After the lunch hour was over and we returned to the scorching field, the heat increased as the afternoon dragged by. The ground would burn our feet through our heavy work shoes. As the afternoon passed, the loads of broomcorn would cover the ground in the yard of the broomcorn shed nearby.

As we hauled the loads of broomcorn all afternoon, we knew that when all of the broomcorn was hauled to the thresher, we would soon become part of the threshing crew. From the time we went back to work at 1 p.m. until we finished hauling at about 5 p.m., we would work steadily through the long, hot afternoon. The hottest part of the day generally occurred at about 5 p.m. That was about the time we generally began threshing. According to how many loads we had cut and hauled during the day, the threshing might last two or three hours. I recall one time when Runt Beverly's crew was cutting a field for Van Mitchusson. When we began threshing, we had 23 loads of broomcorn on the ground. It was one of the hottest days I can remember. Val Mainka was on his way with his thresher.

Bucking was the hardest job on the threshing crew. It required the buckers to pick up as much broomcorn as they could lift from the loads on the ground and carry the huge armloads up to the tables. The broomcorn loads had been lying on the ground for hours. The sun had heated the broomcorn until it was steaming hot. The buckers would have to dig down into the loads and cut out as much as they could carry. Most of the time, they would take two or three heads of broomcorn in one hand, slide them under a large pile of heads, and grasp the other end with the other hand, making a kind of strap that would allow them to carry even more broomcorn than they could reach around. Sometimes the buckers would lie down on the ground to get a bigger load to carry. The exertion of bucking the large loads would leave you exhausted after having spent 9 or 10 hours in the field before the threshing began.

I distinctly remember that day of threshing 23 loads after a full day of breaking and hauling. By the time Alvin Beene and I had carried the last load to the tables, we were exhausted. My legs felt like rubber. I was soaked with sweat and covered with dirt from rolling around on the bare ground around the broomcorn shed. For a long time, I had noticed that the ends of my fingers were hurting very badly. It was dark when we finished, but I walked around the front of the tractor lights and took off my gloves to look at my fingers. On the end of each finger was a clear blister. The heat of the broomcorn had blistered each finger. I never had that happen before or since.

When we fell into an exhausted sleep in our hot houses, we knew that the next day would bring the same heat, hard work, and suffering. When I talk to friends who had those same experiences, we all remember the heat most of all. Sometimes when I step outside into the hot morning air, I have flashbacks to those days long ago.

When I look back to those hot summer days of working in the broomcorn fields, I wonder how we did it. But it was what was required to work in the broomcorn fields in those long ago days. We did what was required and thought nothing about it. The broomcorn industry is long dead, but it lives on in the minds of those who worked in those sweltering fields. Perhaps those exhausting days are one of the things that brought broomcorn to an end. I wonder if people today would or could endure such exhausting labor. Even though we would not want to endure those days again, there is still a sense of pride that comes with remembering that once we were able to endure those hot days long ago.

News from the State Capitol An Update from State Rep. Lisa Billy

As you may have heard, state tax collections for the month of June were dramatically lower than a year ago – 33 percent lower year-to-year – raising the possibility state agencies may face mid-year budget cuts if the trend continues.

Unfortunately, it looks like Oklahoma is starting to feel the brunt of the national recession.

I am often asked how the state's budget is determined and thought this would be a good opportunity to explain the system.

The process begins with the seven-member State Board of Equalization, which annually develops the revenue estimate for appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year and then certifies 95 percent available for the Legislature to spend.

The reason the group certifies 95 percent and not 100 percent is to create a "cushion" in case the estimate is incorrect. The 5 percent cushion built into the system often allows us to fill budget holes created by minor downturns without cuts.

The board provides the estimate 30 to 45 days before the beginning of the legislative session and can revise it the following February.

The members of the State Board of Equalization (currently all Democrats) are Governor Brad Henry, Lieutenant Governor Jari Askins, State Auditor and Inspector Steve Burrage, State Treasurer Scott Meacham, Attorney General Drew Edmondson, Board of Agriculture President Terry Peach, and Superintendent of Public Instruction Sandy Garrett.

After the board develops revenue estimates, the Legislature begins crafting a budget based on those certified figures.

But this year, it appears the estimate was wrong. Unfortunately, budget forecasts are often like weather forecasts – there's no such thing as 100 percent accuracy even when all involved do their best.

Fortunately, Oklahoma remains in relatively good shape. Although tough choices are ahead, we have a state savings fund holding about $600 million and the tax cuts approved in recent years have ensured working families have more money during this tough economic time.

We are a long way from turning into California, where the state issues IOUs instead of paying its bills and citizens flee the state.

And we are far better off than in the oil bust of the '80s. At that time, the Legislature had increased spending almost 200 percent in just four years and did not maintain a savings fund. Today, the Legislature is far more frugal with tax dollars – we no longer spend money just because it's there – and that conservative policy will help us weather the downturn.

It's also worth noting the shortfall is tied to a decline in gross production taxes on oil and gas. Basically, the government's loss is the consumer's gain. Having lower fuel prices at the gas pump increases the purchasing power of working Oklahomans, which I think is a good thing – even if state government has to tighten its belt as a result.

I will keep you informed as the process unfolds in the weeks ahead.

As always, feel free to contact me at (405)557-7365.

Farm Bureau Public Policy Team Undergoing Change

Oklahoma Farm Bureau's public policy team is undergoing minor adjustments to take advantage of staff strengths. Tyler Norvell has been named director of state affairs and will be the lead lobbyist at the state capitol.

"Tyler is extremely knowledgeable about agricultural issues and the political process," said Lori Kromer Peterson, vice president of public policy. "Members and lawmakers will see him on a daily basis during the legislative session, representing Farm Bureau interests."

Peterson said she will continue to use her experience as a lobbyist and attorney to benefit Farm Bureau but will now be able to expand her duties to focus on issues and project management.

"We completed an extremely successful legislative session this year," Peterson said, "and we want to build on that success for the future."

Farm Bureau's legislative accomplishments include passage of the livestock pre-emption bill and stronger no trespassing laws.

"When things are going great, that is not the time to sit back and relax," said OFB President Mike Spradling. "This is a great opportunity to improve, expand and make things even better. We've grown in membership strength and political clout, and both are important in Turn off the highway and let's go down the Wallville Road. The story you are about to read is true. The names have been changed to make it more interesting. It was a cool Fall morning, early, the shadows of night still embraced the land. The Owl Man, that mysterious writer of the local paper, historian, humorist, and eyes of the night, yesterday, today, and tomorrow. Already is about, headed to his undercover job as an oilfield laborer while he keeps an eye out and ears open to any and all activities taking place down the Wallville Road. In his white Mercury Cougar makes a pit stop at Papa's Trading Post in the town once known as Beef Creek, to fuel up for the day. His attractive sidekick who he often calls Cinderella is with him, she waits in the car as he conducts his business. The tank truck that had just unloaded the fuel allotment for the business pulls to one-side. As the Owl Man pays for his purchase another customer cries out, "Hey, that car is on fire." The Owl Man's head shoots up as he notices smoke and flames coming from the hood of the Cougar. A car full of gas, a tanker truck sitting near buy and the gas and diesel pumps provides a devastating possibility for the Owl Man from down the Wallville Road.

The last operator of the Wallville General Store, Charlie Belt (72) passed away last week. His funeral was July 21, 2009. He was preceded in death by his wife Margie.

The Wallville Church was invaded with a slew of visitors from the Tecumseh, OK Church. Paul and Ramona Jett were on hand as we heard good preaching, from S.S. Terri Nail, July 22, 2009.

Our spy in the the night had a visit with Mayor Donald R. Kay, and grandson Tyler at Papa's Trading Post, Don Juan McClish, on duty at the Warrior Ice and Jerry Work has surfaced again, picking and a grinning at the New Hope Holiness Church.

The Wallville Big Brother Club salutes Mr. Cecil Hunt, who was kind enough to take his 9 year old nephew fishing and they didn't come back empty handed. Isaiah, the 9 year old, caught a big string of bass.

Late breaking news-in the night of July 25, Randy White, the old tree trimmer, lost his home and everything he had to a house fire. Electrical short. Everybody made it out alive.

Partying on another birthday, David Kizer, Judy McCaleb, Lillian Williams, and Greg Rollins all share the 2 of August, Bryan Alcorn parties on the 4, David Quinn, National Guardsman and Jimmy Ramsey share the 6, and Mrs. Leota McCoy, Hughes graduate, birthday is the 7. Have a good one.

Big time winner of the roses, Earl and Willie Cunningham, celebrating anniversary #58 this August 2. May they keep on trucking.

Looking for anyone married in April, share your anniversary with us, write Rt. 3 Box 222-A, Pauls Valley, OK 73075 or ring our bell by calling 405-207-3268. Your news also is appreciated.

Ring up 12 anniversaries this August 2 is Todd and Jessica Parker. Todd once lived down the Wallville Road.

Direct from the pages of Old Al's Almanac, July 20, 1969, Al Hunt was in Stuttgart, Germany when word had come that Americans had landed on the Moon. He was a young 20, nearing 21 on the first day of October.

The Wallville Babysitters Association of Tiffany Hunt and Kristen Hunt will babysit children age 1 to 10, $15 a day. Call 405-207-3268 or 405-207-1691.

FYI-Chad Work and Michelle Work, July 28 was their 7th anniversary, to correct our slight of last week.

Calling Robert Dennison, Calling Robert Dennison. Wallville ambassador to Capitola, CA. Pen pal to the owl man, word has grown cold of late.

Lewis and Dee Saylor's of Euphora, MS, was paid a visit by sisters and family, Robert and Kathy Ellithorp, Ruth Griffin, Barbara Albertson, Judy and Wayne Norton. All enjoyed time spent.

Leonard Nathan Franklin (87) passed away July 24, 2009. Leonard, a long time resident, an used car salesman, sold ye olde editor Al Hunt his first car, a 1964 Dodge Dart.

It was an old home week at the Owl Man's residence, July 24-26, with Matt, Kristi, and Anna Hunt, Joe, Kandace, Sierra, Kenzie Hunt, Aaron Hunt, Charity Hunt, and Tim and Hannah Hunt of Texas in town having a hey-dey in a pool of water and eating us out of house and home. You know what I mean.

Taylor Rae Webb made a surprise visit to her mom, Mary Webb at 12:15 Saturday morning, July 25, aunt, uncle, and grandparents, Dean and Diane Perry were surprised as well.

The Wallville Veteran's Committee salutes Army soldier Charles Belt, a soldier of the Cold War, and silently years of the 1950s. Honorably discharged for a job well done.

The Wallville Church, 3 3/4 mile down Wallville Road and a quarter mile east with services Sunday morning, Sunday night at 6:30 p.m. and then 7:30 p.m. Wednesday and Saturday night. Enjoyed visits and preaching of Brothers Carl Pelfrey of Lindsay and Brother Timothy Hunt of Texas, over the weekend.

In the 18th year of writing, visiting, and traveling down Wallville Road, we ask the question can we make it 20 years? And 1000 columns? Only time will tell. This is be kind to "Timothy and Hannah Hunt" week, soon to become a trio.

Our sponsors this week has been the Wallville volunteer Fire Department where their motto "Wet tow sacks and water hose in a flash". Also, the Wallville Coon Hunters Association. Willie Ellithorp president-now the rest of the story.

Was it a terrorist attack, evil forces at work to hinder the work of the Owl Man, or as some suspected an oil leak hitting a hot manifold. Which ever was the case, the Owl Man jumped into action, taking his very own life in his hands to rescue the fair Cinderella. He races to the burning vehicle, knowing that flames catching with gas fumes could prove explosive. Reaching the Cougar, he pops the hood and flames shoot out. And then a man known, but to God arrives with a fire extinguisher and saved the day putting out a situation that could have just as easily ended the life of the Owl Man from down the Wallville Road.
